...be the biggest winners."

It's really a matter of getting past the fear of competition. "Look at other industries that had competition scares, such as the fear by the movie industry that videotapes would ruin them," says...is a target all retailers are shooting for," says Cheryl Traverse, president and CEO of brightinfo.com. "But because the Web is a self-service paradigm, click-and-mortar retailers do not...there's backbone. Retailers have a tremendous infrastructure opportunity that will help them not only compete with e-tailers but pull ahead of them if deployed properly.

"Think about a national...going to see a great deal of friction as some of the suppliers start directly competing with retailers. Actually, it's already happening."

There's a rumor floating around the industry...

...and put up a site that didn't really work and they wonder why, says brightinfo.com's Traverse. "The reason is the mass market customer that's just now coming online..."

Text:

"You, too, can be a CEO."

"THINKING OUTSIDE OF the box" is often defined in Silicon Valley as creating the next hot product or squeezing top dollar out of customers, but Cheryl Traverse has given the phrase new meaning. She is the CEO of Taviz Technology formerly SmartDB Corp., and she has launched the company on an IPO track by offering e-business integration software to Fortune 1000 and emerging companies.

Like HP CEO (and former HP secretary) Carly Fiorina, Traverse has followed a circuitous route to get to her current position. She began her career more than 20 years ago as a fifth-grade teacher, and her path is instructive for anyone who has big dreams but may lack what the gatekeepers of their professions consider the right gender, ethnicity or academic pedigree.

Taviz is the second company to make Traverse a CEO. Last year she sold her first company the e-commerce start-up brightInfo.com, after building it to $4 million in revenue and 40 employees in seven months. She worked her way through the cable and telco industries before getting a toehold in high-tech by taking jobs that she says men wouldn't take "because they didn't have to"--jobs that were risky or nonprestigious but that gave her new skills and successes. She credits excellent male mentors for helping her along the way and acknowledges the four mainland Chinese engineers at brightInfo who "had the courage to hire a mature American woman with gray hairs as a CEO."

Traverse's jobs are too numerous to detail here. She left teaching to sell radio time for ABC in New York, where she learned to negotiate and compete for customers. She doubled revenue to $220 million at a branch of MCI, turned around telemarketing sales for Sprint, and entered high-tech through a telemarketing job for the now-defunct WordStar. Once inside the industry, she learned through a series of jobs to build a partner channel and a company. She considers Taviz especially promising because the company already has 380 customers and software with deep integration into Oracle financials and PeopleSoft.

Traverse says her investors don't care if she is "green and from Mars" as long as she delivers the numbers. But she believes women must work doubly hard to succeed in Silicon Valley because they don't have access to the same networks that men generally do. One of her own rules has been to "always stay close to the revenue line" so her performance can be measured.

I like Traverse's story because she and I were part of the same generation of girls--the ones considered too weak to play full-court basketball. Teaching and nursing were the acceptable female career goals, and that accounts for the low status of these very important professions.

I also find it ironic that the courage and ingenuity required to maneuver around such obstacles are the very qualities that make a good CEO.

First Personalization Summit a Sell-Out; Hagel to be Closing Speaker.

PR Newswire , p 9220

Nov 8 , 1999

Text:

Gathering of Personalization Industry Leaders, Marketing Experts Exceeds

Attendance Expectations

MINNEAPOLIS, Nov. 8 /PRNewswire/ -- Net Perceptions, Inc. (Nasdaq: NETP) and personalization.com today announced that the inaugural Personalization Summit, to be held Nov. 15-16 in San Francisco, is sold out and has exceeded all attendance, speaker, sponsor and exhibitor expectations. Original attendance expectations for the Personalization Summit have literally doubled -- more than 500 participants, representing leaders from throughout the personalization industry, are currently registered. An attendee waiting list has been created to handle the overwhelming interest in this event.

Also, it was announced today that John Hagel III, noted marketing expert and co-author of "Net Gain" and "Net Worth: Shaping Markets When Customers Make the Rules," will be the featured speaker delivering closing remarks on the final day of the Personalization Summit. Additional featured speakers at the Personalization Summit include B. Joseph Pine II, author of "Mass Customization: The New Frontier in Business Competition," and industry luminaries Pehong Chen, CEO of Broadvision; Greg Peters, CEO of Vignette Corporation; Jason Olim, president and CEO of CDNOW Inc.; and Ann Winblad, co- founding partner of Hummer Winblad Venture Partners.

"Everything related to this event has been over the top. We knew there was strong interest from the outset, but this level of demand has surprised us all," said Christopher Locke, editor of personalization.com. "I chaired the business track at the first Internet World conference in New York in 1993, and this first Personalization Summit has many of the same potent tip-of-the-iceberg qualities. I think we're seeing a very large new industry segment right on the verge of going nova."

"Response to this event has been incredible," added Steve Larsen, senior vice president at Net Perceptions. "A year ago, an event like this wouldn't have been possible. Now it's a sell-out. Business is sending a message: Personalization is a critically important part of online business success."

The Personalization Summit, underwritten by Net Perceptions and personalization.com, brings together customers, partners, technology experts and industry leaders for two days of general sessions, breakout sessions and an exhibit fair focusing on the role of personalization in marketing today. Platinum sponsors of the Personalization Summit include net.Genesys, Personify Inc., Sun Microsystems Inc. and Vignette. Gold sponsors of the Personalization Summit include brightinfo.com, BroadVision Inc., Engage Technologies Inc., Andromedia Inc., IBM Corp. and RightPoint.

The Personalization Summit will focus on the technical, marketing and business aspects of personalization technologies and how they affect a company's bottom line. Attendees of the summit can expect to gain new understandings of today's advanced personalization technologies, valuable insights into how technologies can be utilized to heighten customer loyalty, and a clearer vision of what the new millennium holds for businesses on the Internet and beyond.

E-caution // Traditional retailers have a lot at stake as they venture online

Traditional retailers that were near panic a year ago when the financial community began keeping score of online sales, now are exuding caution. National Retail Federation members who gathered last week at the group's annual convention in New York City said they have at stake their very brands -- many of which were carefully built or under construction long before the World Wide Web was created.

"There's just too much to lose," said Jeff Marshall, chief operating officer of the Men's Wearhouse, which launched an informational Web site two years ago but won't begin selling online until June.

The only thing worse than not being on the Internet is getting on and doing it badly, they said.

"If customers have a bad experience online, it will affect how they feel about the brand when they walk into the mall," said Monte Zweben, chief executive of Blue Martini, an e-commerce software maker. "The Internet is both an incredible opportunity to expand your brand as well as a noose to hang yourself if you don't do it right." Peter Urbain of IBM's Global Services Unit agreed. "You're far better off to do a little right than a lot wrong."

Retailers are keenly aware that customer service makes or breaks their business. Last month, the point was brought home when Toys 'R Us took a beating when it was unable to deliver some toys sold online in time for Christmas.

"We're very concerned about disappointing people after the fact," Marshall said. "Making a sale is not difficult. Making a repeat sale is difficult. We're going slow, and at this point we're glad we have. The play for us is to extend our brand to areas we don't serve. That happens over time, not overnight."

That doesn't mean retailers aren't scrambling to find out everything they can about e-commerce.

The retail convention exhibition floor this year was dominated by technology companies, such as IBM Corp. and Motorola Inc., and scores of dot-com companies offering retailers help in navigating the challenges and vagaries of merchandising on the Internet.

There are 108 e-commerce vendors listed in the convention directory, the largest single category. Internet services and interactive shopping are the second- and third-largest categories, respectively.

For every EDS, there's an E-Millennium. For every Indiana Cash Register Co., there's an i2 Technologies. For every Sensormatic, there's a Shops.com, a unit of Austin-based mall.com, which is helping small retailers get online with e-commerce. In many cases, longtime vendors to the retail industry such as IBM and Arthur Andersen have recast themselves as e-commerce partners.

"Four or five years ago, no one was talking about it," said Jeff Nance, director of marketing for specialty retailer Wild Birds Unlimited. "Now it's the only thing you have." Substance and image

In just a few years, consumer e-commerce has exploded. According to an Ernst & Young survey released Tuesday, more people than ever are shopping online and they're spending more every time they log on.

Among the findings from a November survey of 1,200 consumers:

- * U.S. online sales in 1999 were between $10 billion and $13 billion, and were expected to rise to $45 billion to $50 billion this year.

- * The number of U.S. online shoppers more than doubled from 17 million to 39 million.

- * Average individual spending jumped to $1,205 in 1999 from $280 a year ago.

- * Individual buying increased to 13 purchases in 1999 from six purchases in 1998.

But it's not just the dollar signs that have retailers' tongues wagging. The image of e-commerce has evolved from a novelty to a high-powered business tool that many believe is particularly well suited to traditional retailers.

Among the hottest topics on the retail convention show floor was how software and Web sites can be used to give retailers more information about their customers and, thus, sell them more products.

A number of vendors -- such as Brightinfo.com, a partner with Austin-based software maker Vignette Corp. -- are offering data-mining software that gives retailers information about customers' past purchases and buying habits so merchants can offer shoppers similar or related products. The ability to recognize customers and tailor a Web product to their needs is this year's holy grail of e-commerce. Click-and-mortar

While Amazon.com blazed the e-commerce path, there's talk now that traditional retailers, especially those with established catalog businesses, may be in the best position to capitalize on the Web as "click-and-mortar" operations.

At least that's one view from Wall Street. A panel of financial analysts led by Walter Loeb, a veteran retail industry analyst, gave retailers some encouragement Tuesday.

"It's my personal belief that click-and-mortar stores are going to be the winners," Loeb said.

Catalog infrastructure is virtually identical to that needed for the Internet. Storefronts are a great convenience for customer returns and exchanges -- the Achilles heel of e-commerce.

High shipping costs and return hassles are the biggest drawback to shopping on the Web, according to Ernst & Young.

"We have an answer to that," said a beaming Dan Nordstrom, president of Nordstrom.com, the retailer's online business. "It's called the store. We've got 80 of them."

And brand recognition among older, brick-and-mortar retailers is stronger than dot-com startups. That's why the financial community, and even e-retailers themselves, are talking about the advantages of storefronts.

"The worlds of brick-and-mortar and click-and-mortar are growing closer together," said Stephanie Shern, Ernst & Young's director of retail and consumer products.

There was plenty of talk last week that traditional retailers will merge or partner with their online brethren. The only question is who will be the buyer -- and that may have been answered in part when America Online announced plans to acquireacquired Time Warner earlier this month. Retail stocks are struggling at best while many dot-com stocks enjoy sky-high valuations.

"We believe it's going to happen," said Ed Lubieniecki, an Ernst & Young partner. "The major reason we haven't seen this so far is because the extremely high valuations the dot-coms have will suffer (when they buy traditional retail brands)."
